Biographical Sketch:

Warren T White, or W. T. as he was commonly known, was born in 1895 on a farm in Hamilton, Texas. He received his teaching certification in 1912 and began his teaching career in one-room schoolhouses in North Texas. After serving in World War I, he graduated Phi Beta Kappa from the University of Texas with a degree in Physics.

In 1931, W.T. returned to Dallas where he became principal of Sunset High School. In 1946, Mr. White became Superintendent of Dallas Schools and served in this position until 1968. During his tenure as superintendent, he led the effort to separate Dallas Schools from the control of the city council. Up until this point, Dallas Schools did not have their own budget or tax jurisdiction. Student population grew from 54,000 to 165,000 students while W. T. was superintendent which led to the building of 106 new schools, the expansion of 91 schools, which he oversaw.

Another of his accomplishments was to help pass a bill that would establish schools for children who were blind or had mental/physical defects. He was also influential in establishing schools for the deaf country wide.

Mr. White served on many civic, church, and educational committees. Baylor and Texas Christian Universities each awarded him honorary doctorates. A high school in Dallas, Texas was named in his honor three years before his retirement. William Travis White died in 1987 at the age of 91.
